A Jail Delivery Frustrated.

There was to have been perhaps a murder and a jail delivery at the jail in this city Saturday night, but our vigilant Jailer, Geo. W. Judy, got an inkling of the proposed plans and it didn't come off. Jailer Judy was informed early in the day that one, Tobe Bedinger, who was given a five years sentence to the penitentiary at last term of court for burglary, had a club secreted under his mattress in his cell. And when the turnkey, Geo. Mappin, was to go in Saturday afternoon to make the prisoners take their usual baths, Bedinger intended to knock him in the head with this club, take his keys and escape. Ed. Parker, waiting trial upon the charge of shooting and wounding, and Will Henry Williams, awaiting to be taken to the pen for two years, were in the plot with Bedinger. Jailer Judy waited until the afternoon and paid a visit to Bedinger's cell and upon investigation found the club hidden under the mattress as he was informed it was. They do say, that Roosevelt is not in it at all with Jailer Judy when it comes to using the "big stick," and Bedinger swears he will never plan another job while boarding with him. All of the prisoners are colored, and the Bedinger negro is one of the most desperate criminals that ever lived in Paris, and a five years sentence to the penitentiary is not what such as he deserve. It is a pity there is not a law where a fresh man could have begun work where Jailer Judy left off and finished the job so he could never plan again to murder a turnkey in discharge of one of his duties.

Rowdies Fired Pistols In Car.

Three young men who left here on the 6 o'clock interurban Saturday evening caused a great deal of excitement by a display of fire-arms, shooting in the car, and raising a "rough" generally, before the car Lexington. The young men were in Paris, but do live in the and the only excuse that can be made for them is that they were there. They could not be located on after the car arrived, and on off at the entrance into the car.

Instantly Killed.

Friday morning as L. & N. freight No. 47, due to arrive here at 4 a. m. from Cincinnati was crossing Crusers creek twenty-five miles south of Covington, fireman Joe Crowdey was instantly killed while leaning out of the cab window, by being struck by the steel frame work of the bridge. His head was almost severed from the body. Crowdey was formerly fireman on the Short Line, and this was his first run on the K. C. division of the L. & N. His body was sent to Covington where it was prepared for burial.

Engineer Pat Lannaghan, of this city, was at the throttle when the deplorable accident happened.

About Oiling the Streets.

The question of oiling the streets in Paris is now being discussed by many of our property owners, and from investigation we find that our citizens are almost universally in favor of a fair trial of this method to lay the dust. In some parts of the city the dust at times is almost intolerable, and this question should be taken up at once by the Council. In cities where oil has been used, it has been pronounced a success. Some have argued that it would be a disadvantage by injuring floors and carpets by having the oil tracked into the houses, which outweighs the advantage of having the dust laid. In answer to this we quote from a recent editorial in the Lexington Herald on this subject:

"There is no question in our mind that if the oiling of the streets be properly done it is of the very greatest advantage, and there is practically no danger of the oil being tracked into or ruining the carpets and rugs in any of the houses. Even as the oiling was done here last year, which was largely an experiment, and when the company doing it had not had any experience in having it done in the best way, there were comparatively few complaints, and there was universal rejoicing in the benefits derived."

Paris is now making improvements on the streets that our citizens are glad to see and why not keep up with the procession and try this oiling experiment. Within five years every town in the Blue Grass of over two thousand inhabitants will be oiling their streets and why not Paris be one of the first to have this great relief from the abominable dust. If this experiment is made properly, we do not believe that any citizen will ever be willing to have the streets go back to their present dusty condition.

Not only is the pleasure of driving and walking increased, but a number of Lexington physicians last year bore testimony to the decrease in the catarrhal affections resulting in inflamed eyes and throats, which decrease is ascribed to the oiling of the pikes and streets in Fayette county.

Trying to Import Breathitt Methods.

The developments so far in the Hargis trial at Lexington show very plainly that the defense is endeavoring to import into Fayette some of the Hargis-Callahan methods that have made the courts of Breathitt notorious. But we are thinking, that when the matchless prosecutors, Allen, Bronston and Byrd, get through with these gentlemen the effect for good will even reach within the borders of bloody Breathitt. The cheek and audacity of these Hargises is astounding and it remains to be seen whether their great political pull, heretofore accredited to them, will bring them out of this trial free men and conquering heroes. The circumstances of the discharge of one of the jurors and the intimation that the deputy sheriffs were in sympathy with the accused reflects on the good old county of Fayette, and it is hoped that these men cannot come to the very center of the Blue Grass country and run courts as they did in Breathitt. Their influence must indeed be powerful if such turns out to be the case.

A Matter of Contrast.

In 1900, when the Republican press was confronted by the assassination of a Democrat through Republican agencies and called on to make choice between a campaign waged for the punishment of the assassins or a concerted effort in their defense, it chose the latter. The Democratic press, placed in like circumstances three years later, elected to follow the opposite plan, and, from the day of Marcum's death, the strongest demand for the punishment of his murderers has come from the Democratic newspapers.

Good Reason to Be For Jo.

Here is the true state of the case, Kentucky isn't half so anxious to elect Paynter to the Senate as the Republicans are anxious to defeat Jo. Blackburn.

Note the Result.

"The Democratic party kept close to the people in Chicago—and note the result," says the Atlanta Constitution. And these were the results—Chicago for Roosevelt, 100,000 in November; Chicago for Dunne in April, 1905, 25,000.

—Tom Mahar sold for P. J. Millett to Fletcher Mann 19 head of mules for $160 per head.

—Farmers say that the late cold spell did not hurt the young clover or tobacco plants.

—Peaches will only yield a fair crop. The late frost nipped about 40 per cent. of the bloom.

—Lightning killed a fine milk cow last week for J. B. Burnett, who lives on the Moran place.

—Mr. C. Lem Offutt sold to Mr. Willard Huffman 110 acres of land near Newtown at $80 per acre.

—A Woodford county buyer paid 6¼ cents for three double-deck loads of lambs for July delivery.

—The last cold spell we had in the spring of 1904 was on the 20th of April, when it was 4 degrees below freezing.

—Mr. K. Stone, of Georgetown, on his recent trip to Cuba, purchased several thousand acres of sugar and grazing land on the island.

—Thos. G. McClintock & Son, of Millersburg, sold a car load of horses at Cincinnati yesterday. W. G. McClintock conducted the sale.

—Bids were opened at the Navy Department Wednesday for 150,000 pounds of tobacco, the annual supply purchased by the government for the sailors.

—P. J. Millett's Amarant, by Sir Dixon, foaled a colt by Imp. Ruskin. Mr. Millett won races at Memphis Saturday with Hyperion II and The Saracen.

—At the public sale of Hereford cattle by M. Kirtley, Savannah, Mo., 79 females brought $7,740, an average of $98. Thirteen bulls brought $1,235, an average of $95. Ninety-two head brought $8,975, an average of $97.66.

—J. H. Dawson, of Frankfort, Ind., has sold Bourbon Jay 2:21½, for $6,000 cash. Bourbon Jay was bred by J. S. Wilson, in this city. W. A. Bacon sold him to Mr. Dawson for $2,000 last fall.

—The following foals are reported from Maplehurst Stock Farm: Jennie 1½cGeath, by Jay Bird, foaled a colt by Onward Silver 2:05¼. She will be bred to Moko.

Eastmorn, by Baron Wilkes 2:18, foaled brown colt by Jay Bird. Etha King foaled colt by Monbells 2:23¼.

Eastmorn and Etha King will be bred to Jay Bird.

—S. C. Carpenter, of Millersburg, will ship fifty head of saddle, carriage and road horses to Atlanta, Ga., April 25 to be sold at public auction May 4. Mr. Carpenter considers this the best shipment he ever made South. It includes several road horses that can go better than 2:30. He was offered $900 for two of the horses ten days ago. Mr. Carpenter recently sold five fancy saddle and harness horses to Eastern parties for $3,200.

—From notices in numerous exchanges we note that growers all over the Burley tobacco belt are preparing to put out a largely increased acreage this season, in some counties the increase being reported as fully one-half more than last year. This is to be deplored, for as certain as fate, if the season is favorable and the crop prove a large one, it will mean five and six cent tobacco for the coming crop. THE NEWS feels assured that if growers will put in less acreage and pay special attention to producing a fine crop, that the financial result will be far greater.

—Besides throwing out of employment about 5,000 persons in Kentucky and Tennessee, the new duty imposed by the British Parliament on stripped tobacco will have the effect of reducing the efficiency of several other branches of the tobacco trade, particularly the manufacture of fertilizer made from the stems and the manufacture of extract made from the same. The extent to which the industry has been affected can be approximated when it is considered that between 50,000,000 and 70,000,000 pounds of tobacco were shipped annually to England. This will now be stripped in England, and it is said a company has been organized there to take over the stems and utilize them as they were utilized here.

Fruit Men Anxious.

A furious snow storm raged here for about an hour Sunday morning. The green foliage was covered with "the beautiful" and gave everything the appearance of mid-winter instead of Palm Sunday. Early gardens suffered, but fruit men think the fruit has been injured very little if at all. They fear the consequences of a freeze, which is threatened by the continued cold wave.

It is rather chilly; a nice top overcoat at $12.50, $15 and $18 or a Cravenette Rain Coat at $10, $15 and $18 would be quite handy and Price & Co. are showing a beautiful line.

THE LIVER QUARANTINE

"TAKING HIS MEALS OUT."

Hurried eating has ruined many a man's stomach. The digestion-destroying process is gradual, often unnoticed at first.
But it is only a short time until the liver balks, the digestive organs give way, and almost countless ills assail the man who endeavors to economize time at the expense of his health.

A torpid liver causes a quarantine of the entire system. It locks in the diseased germs and body poisons and affords them full play, inviting some serious illness.

In families where August Flower is used,
a sluggish liver and constipation are unknown, so are all stomach ailments, as well as indigestion, dyspepsia, heartburn, headaches and kidney and bladder affections. No well-regulated family should be without this standard remedy.

Two sizes, 25c and 75c. All druggists.

Many Horses at Lexington.

Racing is going to be revived on a splendid scale at Lexington this spring. The famous old Kentucky Association course, the oldest and most famous of all the tracks in America, was purchased a year ago
by Capt. S. S. Brown, the Pittsburg Coal King, who has spent $200,000 to put it in first-class shape. The historic stakes which horsemen used to consider it such an honor to win, have been revived and have filled splendidly.
Already applications have been received for more horses than can be accommodated with the stable room at the track, which means that the purse races will have splendid fields.
The people of Central Kentucky will turn out en masse to witness the racing at Lexington. The meeting is May 3rd to 9th. Reduced rates will be given by all the railroads.

Assesses Railroads.

The Kentucky state board of valuation and assessment fixed the total valuation of the L. & N. Railroad Co. in the State at $32,267,405. From this was deducted the value of the tangible property of the company, valued at $23,073,755, to arrive at the value of the franchise, which is found to be $9,193,650.

This is an increase of $500,000 in valuation of franchise over last year.
The board fixed the total valuation of the Illinois Central Railroad Co. at $15,975,180, the franchise valuation at $4,429,120.

It fixed the total valuation of the Southern Railway Co. in Kentucky at $2,586,650, and its franchise valuation at $1,045,980.

CONDENSED PARAGRAPHS.

At Wichita, Kansas, Carrie Nation months' imprisonment for destroying property.

Bunkie, La., was probably fatally stabbed by Dr. W. D. Haas, president of a rival bank there.

urday issued an order requiring District Attorney Jerome and Assistant District Attorney Rand to surrender

ters and documents belonging to them, which are now in those officials' hands.

Warrants of arrest have been issued against T. D. Underwood, County Attorney of Barren county, and R. E.
Combs, City Attorney of Glasgow, Ky., charging them with selling whisky to negro dealers in a local option county and sharing the profits three miles from that place. The President told friends that he was not looking for hand-to-hand fights with moved to Glenwood Springs, where Secretary Loeb will be in charge of Admiral Rojestvensky's last tele-singularly laconic and eloquent. He wired:

"I will not telegraph again before the battle. If I am beaten you will learn it through Togo, If I defeat him
I will announce it to you."

The telegram was accepted as meaning that the Russian seeks victory or death.

The Iron Brigade

A STORY OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC

By GEN. CHARLES KING
Author of "Norman Holt," "The Colonel's Daughter," "Fort Payne," Etc.

Copyright, 1902, by G. W. Dillingham Co.

O blessed sun that sank behind the ridge and would not see! O blessed songsters that, trilling their last good-night, would suffer no other sound. O wise old Pyramus to wander off beneath the blossoming trees and give place to him who sprang, too late to seize; who knelt and, defiant of hygienic laws, lifted the bonnie, swooning head; clasped again the now pliant, yielding form, pressed kiss after kiss upon the soft, unresponsive but unresisting lips, and plead and prayed and called on heaven and on her until, with faint sigh, the fluttering breath returned, and then the dark eyes slowly opened, and one moment seemed ready again to blaze with the battle fire of the south, but that presently took refuge beneath the white flag of their own, long-lashed lids, and with another sigh, with a soft glow stealing slowly up over rounded throat and cheek and even to the snowy brow, the beautiful, humbled face turned fairly toward him and buried itself in the blue of the broad shoulder. Like that of Appomattox, it was the surrender of utter exhaustion.

They were standing two hours later in the dusk of the old portico. There had been a blessed, yet almost solemn, meeting at the bedside of the aging father, and all the story of that lamentable month two years earlier, with many a tear had been told. With the squire and Elinor returned to the west there was no one to warn them against McKinnon, who from the very first had seemed to gain the guileless doctor's confidence. It was Chilton's childlike belief that every well-mannered man was a gentleman until proved otherwise, and it was not long before McKinnon knew all about them and all about Jack. It had been Rosalie's growing belief that her aunt must have had help, and that Squire Benton or his son was the helper; but at the last her father amazed her with the admission that he had given his personal note to McKinnon for money to be sent to Jack, and for other needs. Little by little her intuitive aversion to the man had given way before his apparently unobtrusive courtesies. He had never hinted at such a thing as a quarrel with the Bentons, father or son. He never referred to them except guardedly until Ladue's recapture and Jack's narrow escape. Then he had told her aunt, to whom he had been kindness and helpfulness itself, that the plan was known to the secret service, that Benton and Ladue had been still in covert correspondence; that Ladue wished to make it appear that he was striving to rejoin his regiment, while in point of fact he planned to be again captured and confined where he could escape the dangers of the battlefield, and the expedition to capture him and Jack was guided by information furnished by Benton himself—Benton, who had been under a cloud and hoped by the capture of confederate officers to win his way back to favor. Rosalie had indignantly refused to believe at first; had even had a fierce verbal affray with the major, who brought the Virginian, Jennings, to prove a truth that, as McKinnon put it, he "never thought could reach her ears or it should never have escaped these lips." An eloquent man was McKinnon, and music was in his voice and mischief in his soul. Benton had planned, he said, to capture Jack, and Jennings there stood ready to swear to it. Then, before she had time to recover herself, she had been ushered into that cozy parlor, and had come face to face with the man who filled her thoughts. It all looked like design on his part, and in her wrath and doubt and bitter trouble, she had hurled her accusation and fled. But, long before Ladue's visit to Charlottesville, she had begun to suspect both McKinnon and Jennings. After his coming she had known no moment of peace, yet how could she write or tell him whom she had so outraged? Of what use was it? He would forget it—and her—in course of time—

"Does this look like it?" asked Benton.

They were standing by the open doorway. She had brought down to him the beautiful sash he had left with her when he rode away, for this very night he must return to Gordonsville and join his chief for the morning's march. Meantime he had been winding it about her, the silken folds clinging to the dainty white dimity, and now, having thrown the tasseled ends over his arm, had seized her soft hands and was looking down fondly, wonderingly, in that almost unrealizing, unbelieving bliss of newly requited love.

"Does this look like it—that for two years I should have been making every effort to reach you, only to be stormed at as if I had sinned past pardon in having clasped you—here?" and, raising her little hands he held them firmly upon his breast, the creamy white upon the dusky blue. Then, one hand being quite big enough for that purpose, he stole his right arm round her and drew her closer. The sound of slow, measured footfalls and soft voices could be faintly heard along the shaded street. Some of her coterie were surely coming to scout the approaches if not actually to seek the presence of their erstwhile queen. Not that they would interrupt for worlds! They only wished to see. And through the summerlike stillness of the night, afar down at the railway station, the sputtering hiss of steam told that the iron horse was waiting impatient for the start. "It may be weeks before I can hope to reach you again," he murmured, "and—Isn't that Georgia Scott's voice?" A swift upward glance of the soft, dark eyes said yes, and though for an instant they fell again, it was but for an instant; there was something so compelling in the glow of his.

"Then—" said he, speaking and bending lower.

"Then—what?" she murmured, persistently insistent on being told, though her head drooped again.

"Then—it's time for some—token of surrender, is it not?" And now, losing the little hands, leaving them self-clasping on his breast, he wound the other arm about and drew her closer still.

"I don't—quite—" she dimpled, her soft cheek sinking on her own hands, her tiny ear catching the loud beating of his heart, a vagrant tress fluttering in the breath from her parted lips.

"You do, I think," he answered, half smiling. "When a soldier surrenders he gives up his sword. When a girl surrenders she should give up—her lips," and holding her more firmly, he bent yet lower, seeking with wordless eagerness the sweet symbol that he craved. But she nestled closer still where he could not see her glowing face, and the answer came, half stifled, after a moment of shy silence:

"You're not magnanimous like your commander. He would not touch the sword of Gen. Lee."

"I see!"—and this very slowly, "and you prefer that I should be—like Gen. Grant?"

No answer, verbal at least. Even queens are women and would be wooed. He should be made to know this, even when both heart and lips said yield. But the fates were against her. Silvery laughter and soft voices sounded close at hand now. Ah, some were happy, even in the shadow of the great surrender, since there were still loved ones left for the sweet homecoming.

"It is Georgia," whispered Benton, "and, as I live, Kate Falconer! They'll be here in a minute and I'll be gone. Rosalie, do you remember that night three years ago when you said 'now or never?'"

One moment of fluttering heartbeat—of latent, still smoldering rebellion, then at last—surrender. Slowly and with down-cast eyes the queenly head was raised. One swift look into his glowing face, and the white arms stole about his neck; the rosy mouth up-lifted and, meeting the fervent pressure of those bearded, eager lips, in its own sweet way, gave answer.

L'ENVOI.

Three years later, in the early spring of '68, we were steaming back through Mississippi sound, en route for New Orleans by way of the Rigolets. It was an exquisite morning, and the land breeze was laden with the fragrance of the magnolias and soft with the balsam of the southern pine. The steamer darted swiftly through the placid blue waters, bearing among other passengers a little party of officers and ladies, returning from a brief visit to Mobile. Carver was there, captain and brevet lieutenant colonel in the regular service, and still with Hancock, who was then commanding the Department of the Gulf. Benton was there, holding like rank with his old friend of the staff; and with Benton, seated on the upper deck, was Rosalie, looking fondly into his face at times, then again, with earnest interest, on another pair, talking in low tones together at the bows. It had been a solemn pilgrimage, this mission to Mobile. They had gone thither to lay away all that was mortal of Paul Ladue, transferred from the rocky banks of the little stream in far-away Pennsylvania to the shady nook where, all night long in the moonlight, the mocking bird sang in this land of his boyhood and his devoted love. Gathered about his final resting place were few indeed of his kith and kin—out the tempered sunshine fell on fair women and brave men of both north and south—the blue and the gray—all enmity stilled, please God, forever. And of those who stood with tear-dimmed eyes, as a bugler of the Eleventh Alabama sounded the soldier's lullaby over the fresh-heaped mound, Elinor Benton had laid a little spray of lilies of the valley on the lowering casket. It was a gray-sleeved arm, for the old uniform was seen on one or two veterans, that drew her gently away and led her, bowed and reverent, from the burial of her earliest love. It was the same arm on which she was leaning now, as she stood gazing down upon the dancing waters under the forefoot, and it was on these two, Elinor and brother Jack, that Queen Rosalie looked with brimming eyes; then, questioning, up into her stalwart husband's face.

But for whom did not Queen Rosalie scheme and plan? Was it not she who, when the Pelhams had to part with old Pyramus, sold a precious ring to buy him? Was it not she who found place after place among the officers for young Pomp, well nigh spoiled in the exaltation of being his own master? Was it not she who pleaded for Hector, faithful to her husband through many scenes, yet sometimes lax in duty through the fascinations of New Orleans? The old home at Charlottesville had gone to other hands after the doctor's peaceful death in '66. Jack had previously settled down to hard work in New Orleans and, like many another manful young Southron, was winning his own way in the paths of peace. Life seemed vested with new interest to him, however, since the coming, early in the winter, of Aunt Elinor to stand sponsor on a very interesting occasion, and if Rosalie Benton had a wish still ungratified it was one that bade fair soon to be numbered with others of the past. Her soldier Fred was proud and happy in his profession, a success, despite all prophecies of Stanton to the contrary and all pleadings of the squire to quit and learn the law. Her baby boy had no peer in army circles in the south. Her brother, after one serious illness during the yellow fever the previous autumn, was in the best of health and the height of hope and spirits. Always a frequent visitor at their bright army home at the old barracks, he had become practically a day boarder, as he expressed it, since the advent of Aunt Elinor. The war, that left its scars on so many a soldier's frame, seemed to have bequeathed no bitterness to the men who battled in the field. They that fought so manfully in the smoke-shrouded ranks, either blue or gray, had no stomach for the post-bellum warfare waged in congress and convention by untirred orators of the McKinnon type—men so seldom heard of on the fighting line that only when the war was over did we begin to realize the valorous zeal that burned unquenchable in their breasts. McKinnon had gone no more to the old home city. He scored brilliantly a while in Georgia after the war—prominent in the bureau of freedmen, refugees and abandoned lands—then went to congress on the carpet-bag ticket, but only for a term. We heard of him in Mexico in '69, head of some colonization scheme that soon dwindled into smoke, then lost track of him entirely.

As for the old brigade, the few remaining forms are bent; the beards are thinned and grizzled; the old and honored leaders have almost all been gathered to their fathers; only one or two of those that, rising with it, won the star of command, still move and have their being. But as year follows year, the few survivors gather to tell again the tales of Gainesville, Gettysburg and the awful wilderness, and to crown with love and loyalty the names of those that made them and led and lived with them through all that heroic struggle for national life, there rings ever a sentiment second only to the faith and fealty they owe the flag—boundless is their belief in the men that wore the blue; boundless, also, is their soldier admiration for the men that wore the gray.

Carlisle Goes Dry.

Our neighboring city of Carlisle, by the decisive majority of 103 out of a total of 385 votes cast, refuses to grant license for the sale of spirituous, vinous and malt liquors. For fifteen years prior to the first of January, saloons were granted license and the city derived $3,000 per annum from that source, almost one third of her total income. Unquestionably this loss in the city revenue will have to be met by an increased rate of taxation, or by placing a license on trades and professions.

We presume the citizens of Carlisle know best how to manage their own affairs, and will be equal to the emergency of straightening out their financial difficulties. But, does prohibition prohibit? Is not the legalized, lawful and licensed saloon preferable to the "blind tiger?" Secreted in some inscrutable hiding place, paying no revenue into the coffers of the city treasury and yet furnishing the same amount of intoxicating beverages of an inferior quality.

Experience has taught that as long as whisky is manufactured it will be both sold and drank, and that when an aroused public sentiment in any community prohibits the licensing of a saloon it invites the establishment of the "blind tiger," and makes home drinkers out of men who provide the beverage by the pint, quart and gallon.

Policeman Anderson struck Mr. Clay and the blow staggered him. Mr. Clay had called a newsboy in from the street to purchase a paper and policeman Anderson insisted that it was against the rules of the hotel for newsboys to sell papers in the hotel."

Sentenced to Life Imprisonment.

At Paducah, Wednesday, Mrs. Brockwell pleaded guilty on the charge of murdering her three children and was sentenced to life imprisonment. When the verdict of the jury was read she displayed no signs of emotion and did not seem to realize that she was to serve the remainder of her life in prison. Many had expected her to break down when the verdict was read.

On Friday night, March 24, Mrs. Brockwell gave three of her little daughters, Ola Lillie and Lucy, aged four, three and nine years, respectively, morphine in coal oil, telling them that it was medicine. She confessed to the crime.

A motion for a new trial by the attorneys for the defense was continued until the next term of court. Meantime Mrs. Brockwell will undergo an examination for insanity, and if found sane, the verdict will stand; if not a new trial will be granted.
